CASA Trap Shoot fundraiser hits bullseye yet again

Tahlequah – The second annual Trap Shoot Fundraiser for CASA of Cherokee Country was held Saturday, Oct. 3, at the Tahlequah Gun Club, located near Welling.

Over 35 marksmen each one brought his/her shotgun and shells, and shells were available at the site if needed. Pullers for the event included Josh Hale and CASA Board member Paiten Taylor-Qualls, and course safety & management was provided by Barry Clay . Complimentary Starbucks coffee and Daylight Donuts helped fuel the fun, which featured comfortable temperatures and overcast skies.

The top three shooters of the day were Hestin Lamons and Matt Hodgson, who both hit 43 of 50 targets, and Wes Garner, who hit 41 of 50 targets.

CASA of Cherokee Country is a local non-profit organization that trains community volunteers to speak for abused and neglected children in Adair County District Court, Cherokee County District Court, and Cherokee Nation Tribal Court. CASA volunteer training is offered three times a year for individuals age 21 and older.

“CASA board of directors and staff extend big thanks to Alan Chapman, Cornerstone Fellowship men’s group, and all the other individuals who supported this special fundraising event,” said Joe Mack, executive director of CASA of Cherokee Country.
